P O C K E T K N I V E S

This series of pocketknives covers a broad spectrum of popular, traditional patterns . . . a style and blade configuration certain to meet anyone's needs.

These beautiful working knives are handled in "Carved Stag Bone"

. . . very pleasing to the eye! With the absence of genuine stag, we have sourced a beautiful alternative using bone from Argentinean cattle ranges. The bone is carved by hand to resemble the rich textures and patterns of the finest

Indian Sambar Stag. No two patterns will ever be exactly alike; each piece is dyed to a rich dark exterior and creamy interior . . .

. . . and meticulous attention to detail is then given during assembly to insure preservation of the carved pattern.

Cocobolo

S E R I E S

Pocketknives

This series totals 28 popular patterns and blade configurations to select from . . . and is certain to meet everyone's pocketknife requirements. The eye-catching "user knives" are handled in "COCOBOLO" . . . an exotic hardwood harvested from the forests of South America.

Cocobolo provides a truly rich, elegant look . . . and has been the wood of choice of knifemakers for more than 200 years! It is rich in natural oils to provide a truly remarkable, dressed-up appearance; reddish and dark-brown stripes. D2 blades and cocobolo handles . . . a winning combination!!!

The mid 1930's were a difficult time for many American industries including the cutlery industry. Many once famous and thriving cutlery companies met their demise in this era of economic difficulty. One of them, the Schatt and Morgan Cutlery Company of Titusville, Pennsylvania came to an end after nearly four decades of producing some of the finest cutlery known in the history of the industry. Five former integral employees, E. Clarence Erickson, Jesse F. Barker, Harry L. Mathews, Geza Revitzky, Frank Foresther, who had been previously released from Schatt and Morgan, started their own cutlery business in 1922. They named their new company "Queen City Cutlery Company" after their hometown of Titusville, which was quite often referred to, as the Queen City. They developed a thriving contract business and were still doing well when their former employer, Schatt and Morgan closed their doors in the 1930's. At a sheriffs auction, The Queen City Cutlery Company's founders bought all the holdings, land, buildings and equipment of the bankrupted Schatt and Morgan Company.

In the late 1960's, a time of modernization and diversification, many cutlery businesses were closing their doors or being purchased for corporate diversification. In 1969 the ancestor's of the five Queen City founders felt their business would survive better being part of a corporate conglomeration. Queen Cutlery Company was purchased by Servotronic's Corporation of Buffalo, New York. Since that time Queen Cutlery has gone back to it's roots still using some of the old Schatt and Morgan equipment, tooling and processes and has become the finest manufacturer of high quality antique style pocketknives and hunting knives in the U.S. today. The former Schatt and Morgan brand is considered the most valuable collectable pocketknife available, and the Queen Cutlery branded knives are the finest built users knife on the market.

NOTE: You are encouraged to contact us for any of your "Private Label" requirements . . . fixed blades or folders. We also welcome the opportunity to design your Club Knife or "special promotion" knives. Embossed leather sheaths and Queen display cases also available.
